Blacks Strike in S. Africa

A Million Protest As Whites Elect New Parliament

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa's voteless blacks staged one of the biggest protest strikes in the country's history as the white minority went to the polls on Wednesday for general elections.

The election campaign ended with white voters going to heavily guarded polling stations in often near-descried streets.

First estimates indicated that more than a million workers and students stayed at home in segre-gated townships to protest the ex-clusion of the black majority of 25 million from Parliament. In most areas they appeared to have heeded their leaders' pleas for a peaceful, disciplined strike, The three million white voters were expected to re-elect President Pieter W. Botha's rightist National Party, which has held power since 1948 and campaigned on a tough law-and-order platform. Security forces launched a major operation in Soweto, the largest black township and a frequent flashpoint in the past three years of violent anti-apartheid protest.

More than half a million blacks groups called a two-day peaceful protest. The independent Labor Monitoring Group said the boycott Wednesday was far bigger.

Seriously With Surprises

come clear that the joint investigation into the Iran-contra affair was going to be dead serious and full of surprises. Tuesday morning had been spent giving committee members the opportunity to assert piously in their opening statements that they were animated by sober rectitude and determined to prevent the intrusion of partisan or personal purpose and so forth and so on. But the afternoon got down to the absolutely riveting testimony of Richard Secord, a retired general who as a private citizen served in effect as chief of staff for the operations that Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North was running out of the National Security Council staff.

General Secord appeared before the committee without asking for immunity. "This administration," he said, immediately dropping a blockbuster, asked him for assistance. gave him to understand that it knew of his conduct and approved it, and then in "panic" disavowed and "betrayed" him and his comrades. The general did not, on Tuesday, have occasion to present full documentation for this charge, but be testified that his mis-contras was undertaken to serve official policy and was conducted in regular and close contact with officers of the U.S. government. He said that he had brought his operational cares to now-retired CIA Director William Casey three times, and that one of their meetings took place in the White House.

President Reagan, briefly receiving the press in another context on Tuesday, offered himself as a curious but not especially anxious speciator of events that bad somehow unfolded beyond his ken. Whether his manner of detachment will survive the new inquiry and whether his political standing or his capacity for policy-making will be affected are the questions that lend these congressional hearings their undeniable air of drama. The congressional sponsors of the investigation presented it as a painful but necessary exercise in remedial, democratic truthseeking. Whatever the final results, it is evident that the public is going to learn a good bit more about events that have already been in the news for six months. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Proper News Story

Gary Hart pleads guilty to bad judgment, the only charge growing out of his weekend putably a matter of public concern. He has denied any immorality, and while that may interest some people, it is primarily a matter between Mr. Hart and his conscience.

But there is another judgment to be made as well, on the performance of the news media. Mr. Hart, in his speech in New York on Tuesday to the American Newspaper Publishers Association, attacked The Miami Herald, which published the story that linked him and Ms. Rice. "I hope," he said, challenging the publishers, "you'll ask yourselves some searching questions about what is right and what is truthful."

Mr. Hart was giving voice to attitudes that are widely felt. "Sleazy scandal-mongering," some say of The Herald sending reporters to stake out Mr. Hart's home. "Invasion of privacy" ... "Sex sells papers" ... "Why can't the media be dignified and stick to important issues?"

Those attitudes gain support from questions about The Herald's coverage. The newspaper now acknowledges that there was a five-bour gap in its surveillance when Ms. Rice might have left Mr. Hart's bome undetected. She did not necessarily spend

But if the execution was less than perfect, The Herald's pursuit of this story was eminently justified. There is a line between reasonable reporting and intrusive invasion of privacy — and it shines brightly here.

The Herald acted on the basis of information from a confidential source that turned out to be substantially accurate. It did so in a larger context: concerns about "womanizing" that dogged Mr. Hart's can-didacy in the 1984 campaign and arose anew last month, in part because of statements by a Hart aide about the candidate's vulnerability on this score.

And that, not philandering, is the issue: whether a leading candidate could overcome behavior that even his supporters described as a damaging vulnerability.
It is not as if some editor said gratuitously,

"Let's stake out every candidate's house, or paw through every candidate's trash cans, or train a telephoto lens into every candidate's bedroom window," This issue, reflecting centrally on the candidate's judgment and integrity, is one that many, perhaps most journalists would have pursued. Sordid fishing expeditions for scandal are one thing. This story concerns the public interest.

The Misgivings Remain

A letter to The Washington Post appears on the opposite page today from Allan A. Ryan Jt. protesting a Post editorial (IHT, April 24) on Karl Linnas, whose prosecution Mt. Ryan supervised. The Post expressed a deep uneasiness about how the law operates in such cases. Mr. Linnas has been deported as a Nazi war criminal to the Soviet Union, where he faces a death sentence.

Mr. Ryan pounces on out opening claim that the charges against Mr. Linnus had not been "proved or even tested in an American courtroom." He notes correctly that there were extensive proceedings to revoke Mr. Linnas's citizenship and later to deport him. But he overlooks entirely that our openiog claim was by way of introducing the source of our doubt — that only civil trials had been held; that there were no criminal prosecutions. Of the major diffetences between them, the crucial one is that in a denaturalization or deportation case. jury trial is not available. In a citizenship case, moreover, the judge may draw an adverse inference if the defendant elects not to testify: Mr. Linnas so elected

Mr. Rvan imputes to us the suggestion. which he denies, that he had offered in evidence the Soviet court's "judgment" of Mr. Linnas. But we never came close to saying that the American proceedings were based on the Soviet judgment. Our point is that those proceedings rested largely on Sovi-et evidence. This included documents and the videotaped testimony of four Estonians that Justice Denartment attorneys took while the Soviet prosecutor, who was present throughout, was using what an American judge later called "prejudicial language." Of the four Estonian witnesses, it is reported, the single one who said he actually saw Mr. Linnas shoot a prisonet was a former concentration camp guard who changed his story repeatedly and described himself as an outpatient at a psychological hospital.

Mr. Rvan insists that the defendant got the full protection of American due process. He ignores that while the due process that Mr. Linnas received supports loss of citizenship and deportation, the effect was to put Mr. Linnas into the hands of a Soviet criminal justice system with a very different standard and which had already sentenced the defendant to death. The process Mt. Linnas underwent in American courts would not have supported criminal conviction and a death sentence. Our misgivings about this central point are only deepened by the prosecutor's seeming determination to evade it.

Headless in South Africa

The election is probably the most important since that of 1948 - when an astonished Field Marshal Smuts was bundled out of power and the National Party began 39 years of uninterrupted apartheid rule. For academics, students and business leaders the National Party is no longer a credible avenue to ensure power-sharing and thus Afrikanerdom's survival. And without that credibility it has lost its legitimacy as the political arm of the Afrikaner people. The tribe has lost its political head. President Botha's party will be returned to power, but without the support of the best of its breed. It could be a hollow victory and one that may not endure much before 1989 when white South Africa. is once again due to go to the polls. Then once again Mr. Botha, or his successor, will have to counter the threats from Afrikanerdom's left and right with a policy which offers neither separation nor power-sharing. but the bankruptcy of continued repression. - The Times (London).

Gandhi in a Sea of Trouble

The resignation of three senior ministers within a month, a clash between the prime minister and the head of state over constitutional propriety, two major bribery scandals linked to arms purchases, and the loss of two state governments to the opposition would be enough to shake any government. While a degree of drama is taken for granted by an electorate which has become wearily used to political crises, there can be no question of Rajiv Gandhi emerging from this sea of trouble unscathed. This is not to say that his government is collapsing. Mr. Gandhi continues to have an enormous popular following: his majority in Parliament is secure. But for the first time public confidence in his ability to bring about the changes in India which be promised after his huge election victory in 1985 appears to be waning.

- The Independent (London). Sweden in the Arms Race

Sweden's nonaligned status has given it an independence based on a delicate balance of contradictions. Sweden's position has also made it largely self-reliant in arms. But in recent years Swedish munitions makers have turned increasingly toward selling arms abroad in order to remain self-sustaining. The result is that a country with a deep commitment to exporting peace has become an exporter of war. - The Journal of Commerce (New York).

BASRA, Iraq — The crash of shelling and the lights of cars crawling cautiously along the western shore of the Shatt al-Arah waterway are the main sounds and sights of war in Basra by night. At first light, the sprawling river port of palm groves, mosquitoes and rusting ships trapped by the war looks like a stage set with the lights

The shelling has destroyed thou-sands of homes. About half a million people have left the Basra district. After nearly seven years of war and some three years of siege by Iranian forces 10 miles (16 kilometers) away, the Sheraton Hotel, once the city's pride, is pocked and lacerated.

Students and some faculty members at the big new university campus are curious about a visiting Western newsman. Does the pres-ence of a "minder" from the Information Ministry in Baghdad inhibit them? Mostly, the young people in-sist that they will stay in Basra no matter what and finish their studies.

President Saddam Hussein has made clear that he wants those who bave fled Basra to return and endure the shelling and hardships. The students endorse this, although without great enthusiasm.

Few young Iraqis can avoid mili-tary service, usually lasting three years if they survive. Those we saw in the regular army, and older men and women from the 300,000-strong People's Army or militia, seemed fairly cheerful, even those lining up impatiently to phone home from a sandbagged telephone center.

As discussed in the UN Security Council and in recent Soviet-U.S. conversations, the move centers on getting Iran to accept UN Resolu-tion 582 of February 1986, which calls for a cease-fire, withdrawal by each belligerent to its borders, and peace talks. Iraq has accepted. Iran. demanding Mr. Hussein's downfall and ninous war reparations from Iraq's Arab backers, has not. On April 27, Jordan's King Hus-sein and Crown Prince Abdullah of Sandi Arabia hosted a secret meeting between Saddam Hussein and his old adversary President Hafez al-Assad of Syria. That was bad news for Iran, since Syria has been Iran's only serious Arab ally. Iran's only serious Arab ally.

A curious combination of Arab and non-Arab states — including Japan, which has large stakes in Gulf oil and industry — is trying to get both sides to accept an arms embargo, apparently an American idea. Iraq, it is argued here, would be the loser. It has many official acceptance. loser. It has many official govern-ment suppliers. France, Britain, the Soviet Union and other powers have official or unofficial arms merchants supplying one or both sides. Thousands of French jobs, for example, hang upon continuing to sell Mirage combat planes to Iraq. Iran relies more largely than Iraq on the greed of private arms merchants, from California to South Korea.

Meanwhile the war rumbles on. The night sky of Basra is hit by the flashes of artillery and rockets to the east. When the sun rises, the coffins atop the taxis and cars moving northward will reveal more victims of a war that too few, aside from those fighting and dying, have really seemed to want to stop.

It Won't Be 💌 Another Watergate

By Raymond Price

WASHINGTON — Consider this a shot across the bow. For the next umpteen weeks the American news media will be transfixed by the Iran-contra hearings. News-watchers may or may not be transfixed, but the reporters and anchorpeople and commentators will be. It's their story. It's their high, It's their big chance. They have already had a taste of the blood such hearings can draw. And one such taste leads to another. It's addictive.

But this time around one thing is going to be different. There are some of us who were on the losing side in the Watergate battle, who learned from that experience how the game is played, who still have vivid memories of it, and who are not going to stand idly by if it is played that way again. The hearings opened Tuesday on all the right notes of biparusanship. search for the truth, etc. But we heard the same dulcet tones at this stage 14 years ago. And once again both the pressures and the temptations will work powerfully to push the process in a different direction.

The key to bringing down a president is a community of interest among partisan committee members, their staffs and the media. Committees have the power of subpoena; reporters do not. Reporters have the power of publicity; committees do not. Each needs the other. Each uses the other. The committees leak po-tentially damaging tidbits. The re-porters embroider these into stories, which then never have to be proved.

Once the game gets going, truth becomes only marginally relevant to the orchestration of the story. What matters is drama — good guys, bad guys, big game, the spirit of the chase. the fittiliting promise of new revela-tions to come. As the competitive pres-sure among the media builds, there is a greater premium every day on getting something the compenition does not have — and the only thing that has value is some suggestion of wrong-doing, the closer to the president the better. It does not really matter whether the suggestion is true or false. As long as it can be attributed, even to an anonymous source, it serves.

There is no great trick to putting a sinister spin on bits of information. All you need is to take one scrap of truth, add significant but subtle misstatements of what is "known" from previous reports, wrap it all up in a blanket of speculation and draw a chilling conchision about what this will mean if the speculation proves true.

You don't even have to fill in the full picture; provide enough titillating suggestions and the audience's imagination will do the rest. By the time it turns out to be untrue, you are safely delivering yet another bit of heavy-breathing innuendo.

Media people insist that truth is what they are after, but they know that it is not truth that makes them stars. It is drama. The duli truth is not news. The dramatic half-truth is news. And the drama of an allegation is directly proportional to two things: the prom-nence of the target and the seriousness of the allegation or insinuation.

Those committee members who are after the president's scalp are the ones most useful to the building of such stories, and therefore they are the ones who are lionized. Committee members know this, it is one of the pressures they are under.

Watergate worked one of the swiftest, most miraculous image transformations in American history. Sam Erviu. senator from North Carolina, was vilified for years as a Neanderthal racist. But once he got Richard Nixon in his sights, be was hailed as the greatest-constitutional oracle since Chief Justice John Marshall. His down-home demagoguery set a new political fashion; at the Senate committee nearings his every comment was greeted by applause from a cheering claque. In Washington today, whole armies of people are panting for a Watergate replay. A lot of them have notebooks and cameras. If they can con the public into taking their morality play seriously, they can do enormous damage.

One cost of the Watergate hysteria was that some 25 million people in Southeast Asia lost their freedom and more than 2 million lost their lives. If the current inquisition builds into a comparable vendetta, the likely immediate cost will be Central America. That is a heavy price to pay for making a few reporters superstars and helping a few politicians to higher office.

The investigating committees have a responsibility to search out the truth. The media have a responsibility to present the truth. That is precisely the standard to which they need to be rigorously and vigorously held. This time, for a change, only the truth. C 1987, by Raymond Price.

The Demands of Ethnic Minorities Won't Go Away

W ASHINGTON — Ethnic mas-sacres in Sri Lanka reflect a problem for an increasing number of countries, democratic and nondemocratic, large and small, Western and developing: the mounting demands of minorities for their rights. We may be moving into a time of troubles for established governments everywhere unless they can devise ways to address minority concerns. In Sri Lanka, as in most other parts of the clobe, world attention is drawn to outrageous measures carried out by the minority, whose agents are sometimes fairly and sometimes unfairly denounced as terrorists. Less attention is paid to equally outrageous measures carried out by the majority, whose agents have the more acceptable titles of army or police.

report on Sri Lanka puts matters into a more balanced perspective. The report records 'arbitrary killings of many bundreds of noncombatant Tamils by government security forces in northern and eastern Sri Lanka." Some news media seem to have a double standard in covering such troubles. When security forces kill noncombatants, it is not news. When at only Tantis or rounly repre-

legislation. But even that form of corrective action may not be enough in some societies. Many minorities around the world are striving not only to he equal but to be different. Today minorities have more tools to deploy in their fight for freedom. A minority finds it easier to get outside belp and explain its case to a distant world. It finds more ways — including some that are reprehensible - to hit out at copressive authority. The number and variety of countries now faring minority problems are astonishing.

guerrillas. In the Middle East, ethnically or religiously diverse states such as Egypt, Israel, Lebanon and Syria suffer growing civil unrest. Can anything be done about the destabilizing tensions that bad relations between majorities and minorities may create? We might try learning from the past. The international system had better arrangements for bandling minority problems after World War I than today.

Special provisions were made in the treaties signed by Poland, Lithuania and Greece for the protection of the religious rights of Jews. Similar provisions in treaties with Albania, Greece and Yugoslavia protected Moslem minorities. The Treaty of Sevres bad provided autonomy for the Kurds, but it was never ratified. A German-Polisb convention in 1922 protected the rights of German and Polish minorities in Upper Silesia. The League of Nations then worked out procedures for considering minority issues covered by the various postwar treaties. Complaints were discussed by ne trai members of the league's minorities committee The aim was to find redress through a disinterested party by conciliation and discussion rather than through judgment and sanction.

There were problems. The countries whose minorities were protected and contended that all countries with minorities should be covered. But progress was made, and for some time the international community had an institutional framework for addressing minorities' problems. Now the communications revolution heightens the pobtical consciousness of minorities everywhere. An emphasis on individual rights does not satisfy them. The demand of many is precisely that they not be homogenized. They assert dignity through their own languages and cultures. The international community must try to do at least as well as the League of Nations in dealing with the problem. Otherwise, as in Sri Lanka, the world will continue to watch and be horrified by a seemingly inexplicable cycle of repression and revolt.

Hart: Poor Judgment Seen in Bad Focus

N EW YORK — Was it bad judgment for Gary Hart, a presidential candidate already rumored to be a womanizer," to conduct himself in such a way that be might appear to have spent a night with a woman who was not his wife? Of course it was.

Is the question of his judgment in this instance a matter on which the American people ought to decide whether he should be president? Of course not

"Judgment" is an overall and nearly intangible quality that does not rest on one misguided decision, one mistake or one moment of thoughtlessness. Many a person of excellent general judgment has been guilty of all of the above.

A president who visits a Nazi SS graveyard, or a candidate who confesses to lust in my heart," does not always and invariably lack good judgment. There is plenty of time between now and November 1988, taking into account Gary Hart's record of public service, to decide whether he is a man of reliable judgment.

The furer over the Hart incident is not really about his judgment, anyway. It is about his alleged sexual behavior. Nor is press and public interest in this story limited to the question of Mr. Hart's discretion, or lack of it. It is mostly focused on what he did or did not do with a beautiful young woman from Miami.

Is that, then, an issue on which the voters ought to decide whether Mr. Hart should be president? Perhaps, if they think that he and she are lying when they say that nothing sexual happened. Lying to the people, whether about ransoming hostages with arms sales or about sexual haisons, would be sufficient grounds for many Americans to oppose a president or anyone who wants to be president. It is unlikely, judging by the few known facts, that anyone will be able to prove that Mr. Hart or Donna Rice is lying. And if no one can prove it, many Americans will be charitable or fair-minded enough to give Mr. Hart the benefit of the doubt - even considering past questions about his age and name change.

The surveillance imposed on Mr. Hart by The Miami Herald was not, after all. infallible; and many innocent Americans, if "staked out" by hidden watchers, might appear to be doing something they shouldn't. It is true that Americans are entitled to know everything relevant about those who seek the White House, but that does not make secret press spying or eavesdropping - in search not of

The Voters Need to Know

SO long as primary elections, and therefore the votes of citizens, matter as much as they presently do, the only hope of achieving informed choices is by means of publicly available information. Thus it may be regrettable but it is understandable that journalists are leaning toward disclosure and away from the pro-tection of candidates' private lives.

 Nelson W. Polsby, a professor at Harvard, in The New York Times. By Tom Wicker criminality but in hopes of sexual revelation - permissible in a decent society. Nor are the apparent fruits of such distasteful surveillance necessarily valid.

A number of press executives, when questioned about the propriety, if any, of The Herald's stakeout at Gary Hart's house, pointed out that in the past reporters would tacily ignore drunken-ness or sexual peccadilloes by public figures. But now, they add, with an air of righteousness, the press doesn't do that anymore. Indeed not, and it shouldn't; but that is a loog way from justifying secret surveillance, stakeouts and spying, even on a presidential candidate. Suppose, moreover, that Mr. Hart did have a sexual relationship with another woman, was discovered and admitted it? Would that necessarily disqualify him for the White House? Many Americans would say yes, and would have a right to vote according to that conviction.

Others might feel that private relationships are private, or should be, and may exist for reasons neither visible por reprehensible; or that other considerations, in any case, far outweigh private acts that some consider unseemly or immoral. It is not apparent to me, for example, that the moral leadership and worldwide impact of Martin Luther King were diluted by his private life. Nor is it apparent that the private life of Gary Hart, whatever it may be, is more important or relevant to the choice the voters will make next year than his views on arms control, the economy, international trade and competition, his general competence and experience, or any number of other issues of real magnitude.

Yet the minute Mr. Hart turned to such issues in his speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the Cable News Network cut him off the air. That may be smart "news judgment" but it is the wrong focus, and one shared by too many newspapers and broadcasters that preen themselves on public service.

As director of the Office of Special the case from scratch, entirely indepen-Investigations in the Justice Department from 1980 to 1983, I supervised the prosecution of Karl Linnas. The Washington Post's editorial "Was Justice Done?" (IHT, April 24) coutains summing missing the prosecution of Karl Linnas. The Washington Post's editorial "Was Justice Done?" (IHT, April 24) coutains summing missing the processing the processin statements of fact, reflecting the writer's ignorance of both the facts and the law. The facts are these: In 1961, a Soviet ling of some sort led to a finding that Mr. Linnas, then in the United States, was guilty of Nazi crimes. He was sentenced to death, in absentia. In 1979, the U.S. Justice Department undertook an investigation of him, which led to the filing of charges in the U.S. District Court in New York that Mr. Linnas had been commandant of the concentration camp in Tartu and in that role had supervised the mass murder of innocent Jews under Nazi authority. In 1981 the federal court held a trial, lasting three weeks, at which it heard evidence and examined documents -not one of which was the 1961 Soviet decree — and following which it concluded that Mr. Linnas was responsible "beyond a reasonable doubt" for the mass murders. It revoked his naturalized citizenship because he had entered the United States illegally. This verdict was upheld on ap-peal, and was followed by deportation proceedings that led to his deportation.

Thus the editorial's statement that "the charges against Karl Linnas have not been proved or even tested in an American courtroom" is flatly wrong, The charges were written by American prosecutors and tried before an American judge in an American courtroom under American procedures. We built tor could responsibly base any charge or trial on the say-so of a Soviet tribunal, and to this day I do not know or care whether the charges that we filed and proved are similar to those the Soviets pressed in 1961. For The Post to state that the charges were not "proved or tested" in an American courtroom is not only wrong but demeaning to the Justice Department and to the federal court that tried the case in 1981.

The statement that "Mr. Linnas has never had a criminal trial in the United States," although technically accurate, is highly misleading, and the related state-ment that "immigration (sic; deportation) procedures do not afford a defendant the same protections as a criminal trial" is wrong. The lengthy civil trial that was conducted in Mr. Linnas's case had every protection that American law accords the accused in a criminal case. Specifically, he claimed a Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, he was identified through photo spreads that comported in all respects with the standards set by the Supreme Court for criminal cases, and he had every opportunity to cross-examine witnesses adverse to him and to call his own witnesses.

Most important, the critical issue in the case was not what he had written on his immigration application but whether be had committed atrocities in Tartu in 1942. The judge found beyond a reasonable doubt - the criminal standard of proof - that Mr. Linnas did commit those atrocities. There is not a single protection of our criminal justice system affecting the reliability or accuracy of the fact-finding process that was not extend-ed to Mr. Linnas in this case. The editorial also states that Mr. Linnas did not "testify or even attend" the trial and that the "witnesses were not cross-examined." The fact is that Mr. Linnas refused to testify; be boycotted the trial, and be refused to allow his lawyer to cross-examine the witnesses. Some of the witnesses were examined Estonia by U.S. Justice Department prosecutors; had Mr. Linnas's attorney chosen to attend, at U.S. government expense, he could have cross-examined them there, as well as the witnesses who appeared in New York - one of whom, a New York neighbor of Mr. Linnas, testified that Mr. Linnas had admitted to him that he had been at the Tartu concentration camp.

The fundamental fact is that Mr. Linnas's conviction in a Soviet courtroom was utterly irrelevant to the American proceedings and played no part whatever in the seven years of hearings and appeals that led to his deportation. Those bearings were based entirely on independentgathered, and independently proved, dence, which Mr. Linnas, for reasons of his own, chose not to challenge.

The statement that "Justice Department attorneys are confident Mr. Linnas would be convicted even in an American courtroom" is sophistry. If conviction means a finding that, beyond a reason-able doubt, Mr. Limnas engaged in mass murder, then he was convicted in an American courtroom. The consequence was denaturalization, and ultimately deportation, rather than imprisonment, but the trial itself reflected the highest standards of American criminal justice.

Gloomy Circle In the Atrium

By Melissa Wanamaker

N EW YORK — On a recent Satur-day afternoon, I went with fellow photographers to shoot pictures of indoor atriums that major corporations bave built in their New York lobbies. We went to the IBM building, the Citicorp Cenier and the Park Avenue Plaza. For the urban stroller, they offer a delightful hit of country greenery. Many bave kiosks for coffee and cake, which can be enjoyed at tables set among the bamboo or ficus trees. An air of quiet civility permeates the scene.

But something unsettling is going on. Here and there among the silent trees are the homeless, mostly men, who have ! found a place of rest away from the streets with their dangers and cold.

On weekdays at the Park Avenue Plaza, the homeless are sequestered on either side of a large waterfall that domi-nales the center of the atrium. At the base of its rushing waters, well-dressed : patrons may enjoy lunch or tea at tables set with pink tablecloths. On weekends. however, the cafe is closed. Suddenly, in the general gloom, one sees among the shadows crumpled beaps of human figures lying face downward on the gleam-ing tabletops. In darker corners, open mouths of sleeping men gape. Others stare vacantly. Little groups of men, as if engaged in a gentle game of cards, share a package of crackers and peanut butter. They talk quietly and squint suspiciously as I approach. Others tell me to leave ; or they will smash my camera.

Why am I so drawn to the horror of this garden, to the realization that these are buman bodies among the shadows of this glade? Is it the sudden shock of altered expectations? Yes, but am I not also reminded of the "horror" of a materialistic society that Joseph Conrad con-fronted so hauntingly in "The Heart of Darkness": "My purpose," says his narrator, "was to stroll into the shade for a moment; but no sooner within it than it seemed to me that I had stepped into the : gloomy circle of some Inferno."

In the corporate atrium, too, "black shapes crouched, lay, sat ... clinging to the earth, half coming out, half effaced within the dim light, in all the attitudes of pain, abandonment and despair." I know that high above the atrium's

"gloomy circle" are the resplendent offices of rich investment banking houses. In other times, I have been in these offices, and sat in the private sitting rooms of managing directors, where the sofas are Chippendale and the walls are lined with row upon row of brass plaques commemorating innumerable deals

SPREAD COMPUTER POWER MORE EASILY WITH ERECSSON.

This is the easy new way to spread computer power within your company.

Yesterday, computer power was reserved for the company's "heavy users" and the natural solution was to hook up a separate data network.

Tomorrow, information and computer power must be available to everyone. Throughout the company. And most people will use their equipment only a few hours each day.

Therefore our idea is the only feasible one. With our new digital office exchange you can use your existing telephone network! And plug in personal computers, word processors and terminals as easily as telephones. This simplicity is one half of our strategy.

The other half is "openness".

"Openness" to other systems, to international standards and to the future.

One example: on our new generation of terminals all you need to do is press a button to shift from IBM to DEC to Sperry, etc.

We know that this "openness" is good for our customers. But it's just as important to us at Ericsson. Without it we couldn't break into other computer worlds and build the functional and economical information systems you need.

"Openness" is actually a fundamental ingredient in all our new developments.

Shouldn't it also be a part of yours? Why don't we do something about it? Together.

In Soviet, Mixed Reviews for Americans on TV

Talk Show, Interviews Are Focus of Debate

By Gary Lec Washington Post Service

MOSCOW -One Soviet viewer condemned the official television broadcasts as "shameful." Another objected so strongly that he appealed to the KOR, the Soviet secret police and intelligence agency, to help stop the broadcasts. A third vented his disapproval with an attack against a Soviet participant in the programs. "Let her rot," he wrote in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper.

The broadcasts in question featured neither pornography nor violence, but a U.S. talk-show nost, Phil Donahue, and other Americans speaking their minds to Soviet listeners.

Real Estate: Higher and Higher?

HERE are twenty-five pages of real estate compared to only twenty pages of restaurants, in the yellow pages of the Alpes-Maritimes telephone book. And the opinions about the state of the market are almost as varied as the number of agencies.

Overall, there is a cautious sense of optimism. The market is somewhere between the rampant speculative state of the 1970s and the dramatic slowdown between 1981-1984.

However, there is a noticeable increase in the number of new apartment and housing developments under construction. Among these is the Villa Angelico, just being completed in the Mont Boron section of Nice, where twelve apartments are selling for 17,000-21,000 francs a square meter. And foundation work has begun on the $17 million Monte-Carlo Residence apartment-office complex on the boulevard des Moulins in Monte-Carlo.

Naturally, real estate agents have their own senoments about the present and future market. A sampling of current

"The market is active and continually improving. The stock is diminishing and French investors are again purchasing properties for both rental and investment. Many developments are getting underway with prices for new homes up about 15-20 percent over a year ago. Prices for older properties have increased abour five percent" - Pierre Geig. John Taylor (Cannes).

"People are again willing to pay top prices for apartments in Cannes and the market for expensive homes is picking up. Purchasers are both foreign and French. I can easily find buyers for every home I am given ro sell" - Dominique Dib, SSI (Cannes).

We are getting more inquiries but many people are still hesitant to buy. Prices have been rising but I expect them to decline 10-12 percent during the next year. This should create a better marker for buyers" - Jean-Luc Portos, Huber &

Partners (Beaulieu-sur-Mer).

"It is sometimes difficult to sell larger homes because of an oversupply and concerns about security and maintenance costs. But Frenchmen are finally returning to purchase secondary residences and apartments for retirement" - Gerald Melieres, Deromedi (Cagnes-sur-

"There are not enough new apartments on the market to satisfy demand in the Antibes area. Foreigners are still not buying in significant numbers and consequently there are a number of interesting villas for sale. Apartments and bomes costing less than two million francs and over five million francs are selling briskly" -Michel Lacombe, Agence Kapnist (Antibes).

"Monaco remains a good marker because of its reputation, extellent security, good construction practices and limited space. There is still some speculative buying of smaller apartments but purchasers are now looking for larger apartments in which to live on a permanent basis" - Henri Orengo, SOTRIM (Monaco). "The marker for small and medium-sized apartments has picked up a bit due to new business moving into Monte-Carlo. Some long-term investors are coming back into the market to obtain a 6-10 percent the Alps Maritime" - Rayannual return. Future projects mond Dondain, Ghittimar Consultants (Sanary-sur-Mer). include larger, apartments to meet stepped-up demand in Although every agency has a that sector" - Sergio Camoslightly varying assessment of

Dominique le Stanc closed what was the best restaurant in Monte-Carlo and took over the kitchen at the picturesque Ch2reau Eza in Eze. Roger Verge, who runs the three-star Moulins de Mougins and the twostar Amandier de Mougins, plans to inaugurate the Café La Galerie Commerciale du Sporting d'Hiver this week. And the kitchen at the new Vista Palace Hotel (formerly the Vistaero) perched on the corniche above Roquebrune-Cap-Martin has opened under the supervision of Patrick Michelon, who was the chef at the Hostellerie du Château in Fèreen-Tardenois.

The culinary coup of the season will undoubtedly be the opeoing of Restaurant Louis XV in Monte Carlo's Hôtel de Paris on May 27 under the supervision of Alain Ducasse, who previously ran the two-star La Terrasse in Juanles-Pins. La Terrasse, meanwhile, has engaged Christian Morisset, the former chef at the Château d'Esclimont in the Loire valley, to maintain its

IN BRIEF

Search for Cystic Fibrosis Gene Gains

NEW YORK (NYT) - In the search for specific genetic defects linked to burnan diseases, none has been sought more avidly than the gene responsible for cystic fibrosis. About 30,000 Americans have the disease. Few live past young adulthood. Almost one of every 20 Caucasians, the group most often affected, is a carrier, lacking the disease but capable of passing the defective gene to his or ber children. A child who inherits a copy of the gene from both parents will develop cystic fibrosis. Vietims of the disease produce an excess of mucus and suffer many respiratory infections that result in gradually increasing lung damage.

in recent years the location of the cystic fibrosis gene has been narrowed to a small region of chromosome 7, one of the 23 pairs of chromosomes on which all the buman genes are located. Genetic studies have made it possible to identify carriers in families already known to have cystic fibrosis and to detect the disease in the fetus.

In a new advance, reported in Nature, scientists at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School of the University of London have discovered what they call "a strong candidate" for the cystic fibrosis gene itself. The research team was led by Dr. Robert Williamson. The Cystic Fibrosis Foundation called the discovery "a major stepping stone toward our goal of finding a cure." Immediate uses of the discovery will be in more accurate genetic screening of suspected carriers and better prenatal diagnosis. If the "candidate" does prove to be the gene that is defective in cystic fibrosis gene, the discovery will be a powerful aid in belping scientists understand the biochemical factors that produce the disease.

Pregnancy May Produce Painkiller

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pregnant women may produce a natural morphine-like painkiller in their spinal cords to lessen the pain of giving hirth, a recent study on rats suggests. The painkiller, produced throughout pregnancy in increasing quantities, may make women from 30 to 50 percent more tolerant of all types of pain than they are normally. "Studies have shown pregnant women have a higher tolerance, a higher pain thresbold," said Alan Gintzler, associate professor of biochemistry at the State University of New York Health Science Center in Brooklyn. "We were able to identify the chemical class of painkiller and pinpoint where it was occurring, in the spinal cord."

Clear Sapphire Smiles

NEW BRUNSWICK, New Jersey (NYT) — A new system of orthodontie braces made of clear industrial sapphire was introduced here yesterday, and its developers hope it will replace the stainless steel, plastic or ceramic brackets worn by one million new dental patients each year.

The Starfire orthodontic system, developed by "A" Company Inc., a unit of Johnson & Johnson, uses tiny hrackets of man-made sapphire that are bonded to the front of the tooth and connected by a single straight

Sapphire is the second-hardest element after diamond, so it will not weaken, and it is chemically inert, so it does not cause allergic reaction or change color. The brackets are formed from molten aluminum oxide. which lacks the impurities that give natural sapphire its blue coloring. They will cost the orthodoxuist $7.50 each, as against about $3.50 each for stainless steel bands. The cost to the patient is expected to be 10 percent #### to 20 percent more than traditional treatment, which averages $2,500. Why Did the Chicken Cross the Road?

DECORAH, Iowa (AP) - In "Flattened Fauna: A Field Guide to Common Animals of Roads, Streets, and Highways," published by Ten Speed Press, biologist Roger M. Knutson writes of "squashed squirrels, mangled marmots," and others that come to grief under automobiles.

Knutson cites scholarly studies from the 1930s - with names like "Feathers and Fur on the Turnpike" — by biologists who were concerned that faster cars and better roads would have an adverse impact on animals living along the highways. "Why an animal is on the road, and what it was doing there a few hours earlier, are recorded in its flat remains as surely as the history of a tree is recorded in its annual rings," Knutson writes.

Scientific magazines take the book seriously. "Although written with humor, this is a serious introduction to the consequences of improved human transportation on other vertebrates," Natural History magazine said in a review. "The bodies, flattened by passing vehicles, are more than a curiosity; as presented here, they become a rich laboratory for investigations of animal ecology and behavior."

The Importance of Babytalk

By Jane E. Brody New York Times Service

R ESEARCHERS are focusing with new intensity on the earliest stages of children's language acquisition as a key indicator of normal - and abnormal

They say that the age at which infants smile when spoken to, say "ah-goo," babble and coo may be important clues pointing to learning, sensory or psychiatric disorders and the need for early intervention to foster language development. Intervention to stimulate language ability and perhaps correct an underlying disorder, they say, may head off behavioral and learning problems that often cause family disruptions and lead to social and school failure.

Other researchers who study factors that enhance language development are finding that babies whose parents talk with, not at, them develop more rapid and richer linguistic skills. After decades of emphasizing visual-motor skills and playing down language as a measure of a child's development, many experts now recognize linguistic skills to be the best predictor of a child's cognitive ability. Yet, they say, rarely is a child's language development assessed with the same attention that is paid to physical growth and the acquisition of such motor skills as turning over, crawling and walking or fitting pegs into boles. To fill this gap in the care of well babies, pediatric researchers at the Kennedy Institute for Handicapped Children in Baltimore have developed a simple screening test to help physicians detect lags in language development, sometimes months before babies say their first real word, phrase or sentence.

The researchers, Arnold J. Capute, Bruce K. Shapiro and Frederick B. Palmer, all physicians and associate professors of pediatries at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, say the test can belp to call attention to developmental problems like communication, hearing and learning disorders, as well as aid in the assessment of more severe problems like cerehral palsy, mental retardation and autism, that might not otherwise be noticed and treated until the child is much older.

Experts in language and child development applauded the new test, dubbed CLAMS, for Clinical Linguistic and Auditory Milestone Scale. The developers say the test, which has been standardized and validated, has already attracted the interest of pediatricians as far away as Australia. They describe it and its potential uses in Contemporary Pediatrics. While widely used tests of child development explore some aspects of language, they focus primarily on visual-motor skills. CLAMS is one of the first comprehensive, systematic assessments devoted to language development

To be sure, the ages and stages of language development, like the development of motor skills and physical growth, vary among individual babies. And boys are much more likely than girls to lag in their language development. But the CLAMS test can help physicians determine from parents and from the bahy how closely a child's prelinguistic and language development resembles that of other children who are the

"Although early detection doesn't mean we can 'cure' every problem, early identification can be of enormous benefit to both the child and the family," said Judith Cooper, who runs the division of commu-

 $`Although\ early$ detection doesn't mean we can 'cure' every problem, early identification can be of enormous benefit to both the child and the family."

Dr. Cooper explained that parents who were aware of a language problem could learn bow better to communicate with their child and to adopt more realistic expectations for how the child will respond For example, rather than getting angry when a child fails to pay attention or to mind, the parent may learn how to elicit an appropriate response by modifying the message or the way it is delivered.

Cooper added: "What's really nice about this tool is it will belp pediatricians and family physicians become aware of what's within normal limits of language development and when they should become concerned. If a child is referred to a speech-language pathologist for evaluation, you don't lose anything if the child turns out not to have a problem. But you can lose a lot of valuable time if the diagnosis of a real problem is delayed until the child is in school."

Early identification of some language problems and therapy addressed to the deficiencies can minimize the damage that might result if the impairment were not recognized and treated until the child was 5 or 6 years old, Dr. Cooper said.

For many children, language difficulties impair not only reading and overall intellectual development but can also interfere with social skills and psychological adjustment, said Dr. Carl Feinstein, a child psychiaa one-week-old hahv typically shows some response to trist and director of developmental disabilities at

A child who cannot communicate well may have trouble getting along with other children and may be inclined to use physical rather than verbal means for getting a message across. Many such children are chronically frustrated because they are so often misunderstood or are unable to perform as expected. Currently, experts said, few physicians who care for Their egos may be repeatedly assaulted by parents and goes in."

"About half the children who are treated at speech and hearing clinics bave a diagnosable personality or psychiatric disorder, such as an attention deficit or conduct disorder," Dr. Feinstein said.

However, experts in language development are not uniformly enthusiastic about the prospects of screening children for delays in linguistic landmarks. Catherine Snow, professor of human development at Harvard's Graduate School of Education, said there was a scrious risk of overdiagnosis associated with using an assessment tool like CLAMS. "Normally developing children can vary enormously in language development," she said. "A perfectly normal intelligent 18month-old may have a vocabulary of two words or of 800 words. It is not at all unusual, for instance, for a second child to be a late talker."

Dr. Cooper acknowledged that some children outgrew their language lag without any intervention or lasting scars. But, she added, "most don't outgrow it and currently we have no way to know who will." She also emphasized that the diagnosis of a language deficit did not mean a child was not intelligent. "In some children, language is one of several developmental areas that are delayed, but in others only language development is affected. A large percentage of children who come to speech and hearing clinics do not have other problems."

Dr. Snow also suggested that since the CLAMS test relied beavily on parental observations and reports, it was much more likely to pick up problems in middleand opper-class children than in poor children, whose parents might not be able to supply reliable information.

Nonetheless, Dr. Brazelton said: "We're now erring nicative disorders at the National institute of Neurological Diseases and Stroke.

Dr. Capute of the Kennedy Institute said that until the early 1970s language was thought to develop in a haphazard fashion that was related primarily to environmental factors, such as how much mothers spoke to their ehildren. He added, "We now know that language develops in an orderly, sequential fashion that is determined more by children's innate characteristics than by their environment.

In developing CLAMS, Dr. Capute and his col-leagues followed 381 ehildren from birth to age 3, periodically quizzing parents about the children's pre-linguistic and linguistic milestones. These measures were correlated with other standard tests of infant and child development as well as IQ at age 3. Although development of the test involved only English-speaking families in the United States, the researchers believe it should be easily adaptable to babies in other

The researchers examined two complementary facets of language development: receptive milestones, which represent bow a baby responds to auditory signals, and expressive milestones, which are the sounds the baby makes. Turning toward the sound of a bell or following a verbal command are examples of receptive milestones; cooing, babbling, saying da-dada-da and forming phrases and sentences are examples of expressive milestones.

While babies may understand and respond to verbal communications long before they can create them, Dr. Capute noted: "Expressive language milestones can never be more advanced that receptive ones. In other words, whatever comes out cannot be better than what

ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK YOUNG PROFESSIONALS PROGRAM

The ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK is an international finance organization established in 1966 to assist in the planning and financing of high priority projects in the developing countries of Asia and the South Pacific. Its stock-holders are governments of 47 countries of North America, Western Europe and the Asia-Pocific region. Its headquarters is in Manila, Philippines.

The Bank's Young Professionals Program is designed to recruit a small number of exceptionally well-qualified young men and women to the professional staff.

We are looking for graduates under 30 years of age who have superior acodemic credentials but who lack the minimum experience cormally required for the Bank's professional atali positions.

The work is tough and challenging. The Bank will give you that experience through training programs. Your professional progress should lead you eventually to higher staff positions and to a challenging, rewarding and varied career. The Bank's Young Professionals Program offers attractived salaries, normally free structured work assignments, complemented by developmental activities and formal of tax in the Philippines, in addition to a broad range of benefits and allowances. To quality, you must be a citizen of a member country of the Bank and have.

* Either a Master's degree or its equivalent or a Bachelor's degree with at least two years of work experience;

Proficiency in oral and writtee English.

Candidates should have advanced training in economics, lineace, management, administration or other fields relevant to the work of the Bank. Applicants with training in law, engineering, operations research or computer systems may also be considered. Relevant work experience should be in areas such as banking, financial analysis of projects, planning and analysis of investments, budgets, accounting and country as sectoral planning. Successful candidates are expected to join the Bank in early 1988.

If you meet these requirements, please send in your application in English, quoting REF. NO. YP88-C, with your curriculum vitae and copies of academic records and transcripts to

Does Clay Reproduce?

Scientists trying to explain the origin of life have proposed that day can store information as patterns of lons, like checkers on a checkerboard. They theorize that as crystals grow certain patterns could repert themselves in new layers, which could then split off as copie in a primitive version of reproduction. Duplicating clays might have fostered the emergence

That is one of the clues tantalizrather than the primordial ocean,

Like most semiconductors, clay is silicon-based, containing, by definition, aluminum and oxygen atoms as well. Like the new superconductors, clay's crystals form in layered sheets: fundamentally twodimensional, not three-dimension-resembling piles of jewels or weird, Recent thinking about clay formation has looked less at how rocks are ground down and more at how such structures arise. The layering - more like a deck of microscopic - gives clay a phenomenally large surface area. A lump weighing one pound can have as much total surface as 50 football fields.

All that surface makes clay a powerful chemical engine, because it is on the surface of a substance that the most interesting molecular events take place. Apart from its use as a catalyst, clay's surface also makes it effective at neutralizing toxic chemicals, including dioxins and radioactive waste.

"Heavy metals which are toxic and radioactive stay in the clay forever because they are attracted to the electrical charges on the clay sheets," said Pierre Laszlo of the University of Liège in Belgium.

But it is the peculiar ability of clay to mix disorder with order that most mirigues scientists. Clay's checkerboardlike surfaces provide many sites at which one kind of ion can be replaced with another, subthy changing the behavior of the

"Clays are not ideally crystallized," Dr. Laszlo said. "They have microdomains which are amorphous, and these amorphous domains - domains of disorder are where the catalysis is. You can have dislocations because atoms are missing, or a fracture in plate-lets, and these local irregularities are where chemicals bind and chemical reactions occur."

So clay sits somewhere on a middle ground between the dull check-erboard regularity of crystals like salt or ice and the willful, changing forms of living organisms. That gives it a seductive appeal to those seeking to explain the origin of life.

markets triggered profit-taking among investors sensitive to higher interest rates. Technology issues, which were big gainers Tuesday, led the way down.

At 3 P.M., the Dow Jones industrial average was off its lows, but still down 3.41 points at 2.334.66. after surging 51.85 points on Tuesday.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 8-7. Vol-ume totaled 164.76 million shares. The market's upsurge Tuesday was attributed to increased confidence about the outlook for the dollar and interest rates, and some of that bullishness continued early Wednesday before on Tuesday, the Treasury began its $29 billion, three-day quarterly suction of new securities with the sale of three-year notes, and the 10year notes were set for sale Wednesday. A full appraisal of this refunding will not be possible until Thursday's offering of 30-year bonds is completed, analysts said.

EC Commission Says Progress Is Too Slow in Ending Trade Barriers

BRUSSELS — Progress toward scrapping all trade barriers in the European Community by 1992 has been disappointing, the EC's executive body said Wednesday.

EC government leaders agreed two years ago to break down by 1992 all remaining trade barriers and border controls in the 12-nation community. Their goal was to allow the free 320 million people.

But too often EC ministers have failed to make decisions fast enough to meet the deadline, the European Commission warned in its

LONDON - The dollar closed little changed to firmer in Europe Wednesday after a featureless day's

After opening above Tuesday's close, the currency was broyed by short-covering and speculative po-sition-taking, dealers said, and held to a relatively narrow range throughout the day.

They added that underlying sentiment was still bearish, but that the market wanted to gauge the response to the current U.S. Treasury refunding before making any. further moves.

The dollar drifted down to York from 1.7740 Tuesday and edged up to 139.15 year from 138.85.

Pessimism about the dollar contimoed to be reinforced by skeptimore concrete measures to deal with the U.S.-Japan trade problem, dealers said.

Comments by the Bank of Japan governor, Satoshi Sumita, oo Wednesday had no effect on trad-ing, dealers said.

Mr. Sumita told a Japanese par-liamentary committee that Japan had no plans to lower its official discount rate, as requested by the United States, to stabilize the yen/ dollar exchange rate. He said later, however, that the central bank would continue to guide short-term interest rates lower, as Mr. Nakasone and Mr. Reagan had agreed in their talks. Sterling, meanwhile, had another buoyant day as market confidence continued that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was on the verge of calling for and winning a general election. Dealers reported intervention by the Bank of England to cap stering Wednesday, but there was no further evidence of central bank activity during the day.

THE SECRET MUSEUM: Pornography in Modern Culture

By Walter Kendrick. 288 pages. $18.95. Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by John Gross

HE Greeks had a word for it - or did They? According to a contemporary American dictionary cited by Walter Kendrick in "The Secret Museum." the term "pornography" comes from the Greek "pornographos, writing about prostitutes"; but in fact all that ancient Greek has 10 show is a single recorded instance, in a second-century text, of the word "pornographor," meaning painters of prosti-

Io the mid-19th century, a German art historian drew oo this source to coin the word "pornographer," by which he meant someone who produced obscene representations; and it was in 8 translation of his work that 8 form of the term "pornography" first appeared in En-glish, in 1850. The context in which it was used was that of the "licentious" artifacts and paintings that had been unearthed at Pompeii and were kept from public view. It reflected, indirectly, a reluctance to believe that in Pompeii itself such objects could have been on display in private houses and at street corners, or anywhere except in brothels.

Kendrick writes crisply and amusingly about both the emergence of the word "por-nography" and its subsequent history. But what about the history of the thing? The great pioneer pornographer, it is generally agreed, was the 15th-century Italian Pietro Aretino. He wrote in order to arouse, he was quick to realize the new possibilities opened up by printing, and for the better part of three centuries his name was, in Kendrick's words, "synonymous all over Europe with the portrayal of sexual acrobatics."

That he should have dominated the field to the extent that he did is almost as interesting as what he actually produced. For as Kendrick observes, one of the most remarkable facts about hard-core pornography before the 19th century is "how little of it there was."

This raises a number of large questions. How far did the increased output of pornography in the 19th century reflect other developments social, economic, demographic, technological—that were taking place at the same time?
And was it a sign that sexuality itself was becoming more complicated? (An unanswerable question, perhaps, but not necessarily a meaningless one.) Kendrick addresses himself to such matters only in passing, however. For he is concerned not with pornography as such, but with the idea of pornography, with how and why the 19th century became obsessed with a concept that previous centuries had managed to do without, and with how the 20th century has dealt with the consequences

Any account of the crusade against pornog-Any account of the crusade against pornography in the 19th-century United States must inevitably turn on the long career of Anthony Comstock, who for more than 40 years, from 1873 to 1915, had a quasi-official brief to deal with problems of public morality — although "he was on no one's payroll, had no immediate superior and was free to interest the law on he superior, and was free to interpret the law as he saw fit." Kendrick's portrait of Comstock is full of interesting detail; it is also an attempt to understand him, not just to present him as a grotesque.

One of Kendrick's general points about the Victorians is that they overrated the power of sex (and of representations of sex). There is sex (and of representations of sex). Here is something to be said for such a view, and for its corollary, which is that their successors, in the very act of rebelling against them, have taken over their exaggerated notions. But I think Kendrick needs to argue the case a good deal more systematically and straightforwardly than be done.

than he does. True, he strongly insists that "the history of 'pornography' is a political one," that the concept originates in fears of anarchy and the urge to reinforce social control; and once again, there is plainly something in what he says. But it ignores important aspects of the story, and seems to me one of the reasons why he gets into some unnecessary tangles in the later stages of the book, especially when he comes to analyze the successive 20th-century legal battles for freedom of expression.

In the end, it was probably a mistake to write about attitudes to pornography without considering the product itself, and without taking more account of the psychological dimension of the story. But despite these reservations, "The Secret Museum" has a great deal to recommend it. Kendrick's detailed comments. when he is not straining loo hard, can be highly illuminating; much of his material is unfamil iar, and he concludes on a satisfyingly forceful note, with a brisk dismissal of the Meese Commission report and some sharp criticisms of Women Against Pornography.

Old Pro on the Violin at 10

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

DARIS - When Stefan Milenkovic struck I the opening chord of a Tartini violin sonato at his Paris debut last week, it was already his 424th recital although he is only 10.

Attired in miniature white evening dress, complete with tail coat, and standing barely higher than the accompanying piano, the Yu-goslav child prodigy played through a de-manding program of Brahms, Corelli, Faure and Kreisler with a technique, an innate sense of musicality and a total self-confidence that have amazed and delighted European music critics and audiences since he first performed in public at the age of 3.

Paris was no exception. The audience here gave an immense ovation to the tiny, solemn figure on the stage, who bowed deeply to each corner of the Auditorium des Halles after each piece and returned three times at the end to play encores with his mother, who accompanies him on the piano.

Americans will get their first chance to hear him play at the Newport Musie Festival on July 16, and a New York debut is planned in November.

In a way, child prodigies are disconcerting to listen to, and even more so to meet, because it seems unnatural that a still immature human being should be able to play serious music with the maturity of an adult.

Yet they are a fact of musical life: Mozart was playing and composing at 4. Beethoven played in public at 8 and published compositions at 10, Chopin performed at 9, Riehard Strauss wrote his first polka at 6.

The older of two sons of professional musicians, Stefan was born in Belgrade in 1977 and began to show an interest in music at the age of 2. "It was a game for me," he said in Serbo-Croatian during an interview here in which his father acted as interpreter. Like any less-gifted 10-year-old, he fidgeted on a sola while his parents did most of the talking, and he eventually ran off upstairs to play with some newly acquired French toys.

Music apart, his interests, he said, are "skateboards, video games and hicycles hut not in any special order." As for musical tastes, he insisted he likes just about everything, "Rock, Paganini, Scott Joplin, they're all my favorites." he said.

Stefan's father, Zoran Milenkovic, a violin teacher, devised a special course for him, gradually increasing his practice time by five minutes every three months until now he plays for two and half hours a day.

The violin was a natural instrument for him to start on, his father pointed out, because small models exist for young children. Stefan now plays on a borrowed three-quar-ter-size instrument huilt in 1790 by the Gagliano family of violin makers in Naples.

The gift of perfect pitch enables him to head so vigorously when asked if memorizing and Switzerland. He has made two longmusic is difficult that it is clear the question seems almost without meaning to him.

So far, Stefan's life story has been one of concerts, prizes, study and applause. "He is so used to seeing himself on TV and in the papers, he's immune to fame," his father said. 'He's just not aware of it anymore."

After playing on television at the age of 3, Stefan won the Yugoslav national competi-tion for young violinists at 6, At 7, he was the youngest entrant and the outright winner of the Jaroslav Kocian competition for young violinists in Prague.

In 1985, he was invited to play at the Bolshoi Theater in Moscow, where his father said the Russians at first idolized him but then showed signs of jealousy. Stefan turns up his nose at Moscow, too, saying he was upset hy the lack of toys in the shops and the unavailability of comic books. Other concert recognize any note or key. And he shakes his tours have taken him to Belgium. Spain, Italy playing records in Yugoslavia, including one of the Mendelssohn concerto.

For Stefan, being a child prodigy means attending a special music high school in Belgrade, where he studies harmony and composition as well as practicing the violin and doing his regular studies. Vacations, increasingly, are spent on tour accompanied by the whole family, including his 7-year-old brother, Philip, who shows little interest in music. Soon, Stefan faces a musical rite of passage - the move to a full-size instrument. He will get a first taste of what this involves this year in Cremona, Italy, where he has been invited to play on a Stradivarius that once belonged to Paganini.

Curiously, for all his technical brilliance, Paganini was almost a late developer by the standards of Stefan Milenkovic; history records that be was 11 hy the time he gave his first public recital.
